

INFANT PAGE WRITE-UP

THE only man who never was a child was Adam. Yet one would think from their actions, that some of our dignified Seniors had this same distinction. Take for instance our former class-mate and assistant editor-in-chief, who now struts pompously to our higher institution of learning His picture on the upper left looks as if he were about to go across the goal for a touchdown.

George Lance's youthful picture is on the upper right. One can not help wondering how many girls' hearts he has already broken at that early age. In the center is Nanette Carnahan in boys clothing, thus early displaying her love for all things masculine. The young lady is Marion Baylis, a former classmate.

Our literary editor is shown on the left, just as she has finished singing, "Mary had a Little Lamb." The young lady on the right, who looks as if she were a souvenir of the court of Louis XIV, is Norma Young. We hate to say it, but from these pictures both of these two children have passed thru their prettiest days, although there are two chivalrous gentlemen whose pictures both appear on this page, who would knightly dispute this claim.

In the center is our alert, business man, Mr. George Middlesworth, with his younger twin brother, Jerry; on the lower left is our dignified President, Sidney Kennedy, just entering his first pair of short pants. He has that same look of superior wisdom which he has now. On the side is our gentleman of fashion, Balmer Gorham, what a humiliating metamorphosis for him as well as for the other Seniors to have their infant pictures displayed so here. How the mighty have been humbled.
