

JUNIOR CLASS HISTORY

IN the beginning our class consisted of former city eighth graders and those of the rural districts.

This class was without experience and knowledge and greenness was on the face of the multitude.

And Mr. Duncanson spake, saying, "Let there be order."

Then Mr. Ganiard lifted up his voice and said, "Hearken thou unto my voice, and I will give thee counsel.

And on the seventh day Mr. Duncanson again spake unto the Freshmen; "Gather yourselves together this day and choose whom ye will have to rule over you."

Then did they set over themselves able men and women to perform the duties of their offices.

As Mr. Duncanson had commanded, so did they.

George Lance was appointed President; Alice Rue Rowlander, Vice-President; Corabelle Morse, Secretary, and Bernice Sheffield, Treasurer.

As the days went by the following things happened:

A Hallowe'en Party was given in which the whole class took part, then came the final examinations for the first semester; and during the second semester this noble class waxed mighty in the Red Cross drive.

Now when the last days of this first year arrived they were all glad to be free, but were anxious to start again the next fall.

In the first days of the second year they chose their officers;

Hazen Moore, President; Fred Hersee, Vice-President; Corabelle Morse, Secretary; and Eldin McMacken, Treasurer.

Now when these things were done the social minded amongst them exhorted the class and this was their exhortation:

That they uphold the traditions of the preceeding classes and have a class party.

And this party waxed successful for it was greater than all others and its fame was in the mouths of all students round about.

Now in all the days of their school life the class of 1920 was an adversary to its successor and therefore the mighty men of base-ball conspired among themselves to challenge the Freshmen to battle.

And the Freshmen fled from before the Sophomores and returned home beaten.

Then the praises of the Sophomores were sung high and low, and thus ended the days of their Sophomore year.

And it came to pass that they gathered themselves together in the beginning of the third year and again set over themselves officers:

Loyd Bush, President; Ronald Larzelere, Vice-President; and Corabelle Morse, Secretary and Treasurer.

In the course of time the men of valor among the Sophomores conspired to avenge themselves of their former defeat and challenged the Juniors to a foot-ball game.

The battle waxed fierce and the Sophomores were beaten but not utterly annihilated.

Now those among them, of this mighty Junior class, who were skilled in Debating and in Athletics and in all manners of scholarship, found places in the different ranks and helped to uphold the reputation of the High School.

In the latter days of the Juniors' reign they took counsel among themselves saying, 'Let us now fulfill the traditions of our predecessors and have a Party, so that none before or after shall surpass it.

And it was noised about among the scholars even unto the Principal's desk that this party had waxed successful.

And as to the rest of the acts of the Juniors: Shall they not be written in the next year's Zookitizam?
