

Typical of the parties held here at Mt. Pleasant High School was the "Eight Ball," the eighth grade get-acquainted party, early last fall.

Possibly more interesting than any of the movies our "younger set" saw that evening are the between-reel antics of the eighth graders themselves, as seen above.

Square dancing, social dancing, floor shows, and games entertain party goers from all classes throughout the year. Concessions supply plenty of energy for a close scored ping-pong game, a fox trot, or some mild horseplay.

Our full social calendar is proof that a good party is worth all the work from the first committee meeting to the clean-up crew's finishing touches.

Classes ...

These are the busy hands of our underclassmen. After a few years, a few classes, a few parties, they will exchange their sheepskins for shingles, degrees, hammers, and calouses and the myriads of symbols that herald their entrance into a world of decision and precision. But for the present there remain lessons to learn, skills to master, friendships to build . . .
